Street-Cars Here Before the War.

RICHMOND, Va., May 7, 1890.

To the Editor of the Dispatch:

Will you publish for the Lenefit of a reader and also to settle a dispute whether or not street-cars were running on Main street, in this city, before or during the war between the States? READER.

[There was a short line on Main street before the war. It was a primitive affair.

The tracks were taken up during the war.

honor his memory carries with becoming respect for the opinit becoming respect for the opinions of our fathers; affection for "the dead who died for us," and due reverence for many who, though survivors, lost in that fierce struggle all that the enemy could wrest away save the breath of life.

Such were the feelings awakened by the arrival here of the statue of Lee. It roused the spirit of the city which was deemed worthy to be selected as the Confederate capital and whose suburbs became its batbecoming respect for the opintle-grounds, and it foreshadowed for the day of the unveiling of the monument-May 99th-another one of the most m rable demonstrations of our times.

A warm welcome is waiting here for the Massachusetts newspaper-men who are to visit Richmond May 17th. Unfortunately the arrangements are such that it will be impossible to show the visitors much of the achievements and the superb possibilities of this beautiful city, but there is no bar to the display of Virginia hospitality on the occasion, and we are willing to wager that our coming guests will not be allowed to depart without having realized that it is good to be here. There is, as there has always been, a peculiar bond of sympathy between Massachusetts and Virginia, descendants though their people are ginia, descendants though their people are respectively of the Puritan and the Cavaher, who were not, as we know, accustomed to fall into each other's arms in brotherly affection. The two States are, we believe, the only members of the American Union officially styled Commonwealths. more. but independently of this political accident, which probably is not all an acci dent, it is safe to say the existing affinity between the proud and noble sisters will only be strengthened by the experiences of the 17th.

The Shakspearean sentiment as to troubles-to the effect that they never come single spies but in battalions-may be applied to horrors as well, and is given further pith and point by the report today of another burning to death of lunatics confined in an asylum, or this time in the department for the insane of a poorhouse, to be exact. Such occurrences are beyond the power of description. They have an awfulness peculiarly their own. Their bare mention is enough to make the flesh creep with a sickening sense of the peculiar helplessness of lunatics within the grasp of devouring flames. We can only hope that the recurrence of such holocausts may be at as great intervals of time as possible in the fixed order of events.

It is significant that Senator Incalls has been repudiated with emphasis by the President of the Farmers' Alliance of Kansas. There is more hope for purer politics and the unmasking of political hypocrites when the true character of such a public man as INGALLS is at length discovered and is condemned by the people who originally gave him prominence. INGALLS has a wonderful vocabulary of vitriolic language and beyond this nothing to commend him. He is a disciple of the gospel of hate for the South, and no man can have venom in his heart for any section of the country and be a patriot, while the country cannot afford to have others than patriots in its Federal legislature.

Senator Daniel has been recently in Raleigh, where he argued a case in the North Carolina Supreme Court, and the papers of the Tar-Heel capital have taken papers of the Tar-Heel capital have taken occasion to compliment him handsomely. The News and Observer, for example, says:

"A soldier, a scholar, an orator, and a statesman, he (Mr. Daniel) gives the world assurance that the Old Dominion renews her youth in each passing generation, and that the mould in which her great men have been cast remains yet unbroken."

is a true representative of the fine flower of Virginia manhood. The Old Dominion is proud of him, and it is pleasant to see his merits fully appreciated abroad.

those States made Mr. Garnett and family extremely uneasy. Not being able to hear through the mail they decided to try our telephone to West Point and the telegraph line from there. Mr. Garnett fixed up a message to each of his daughters and sent them off, little hoping of any relief resulting therefrom, but in three hours actual time he received a response to each message, giving the cheering news that both of the ladies were well and inquiring "how were all at home." The distance covered by the message to Torrance was some 1,300 miles, and to Pine Bluff, Ark., 1,100 miles, not counting the distance and time necessarily taken to reach these ladies at their respective abodes in the country. Yet in three hours' time to a minute these messages were sent—first by a 'nhone, then to intercept the telegraph line—and response to each to hand.
